During his 17-year career, in which he appeared in 341 Premier League games and scored 12 goals, he played for six clubs in his home country, including Porto, with whom he won 15 major titles. He also briefly represented Real Madrid. The Secretary has played more than 30 times with the Portuguese national team, representing the country at two European Championships. In 2007 he started working as a coach. Club career After his professional debut with Gil Vicente FC in the second division, Secretario, who was born in San Juan da Madeira and began his career as a midfielder, moved to the Premier League with FC Penafiel in 1989 and then spent another season with other league team F.C. Famalic.o. In 1992-1993 he signed with S.C. Braga, where he ran another campaign. In the summer of 1993, Secretio joined league club FC Porto, quickly cementing himself as an undisputed starter in defence or midfield - after retiring, he played almost exclusively as a right-back - and assisted the Northerners in two leagues, one Cup and one Super Bowl in his first spell. He attracted attention from Real Madrid, who signed the player in July 1996, but he will face extreme difficulties in carving a starting niche with the Spanish club, which was aggravated in January 1997 by the signing of Italian Christian Panucci: In a bizarre incident in the game against Betis at the Santiago Bernabeu stadium, the delay was caused by a rabbit allegedly thrown into a brawl from the terraces and he was quick enough to catch him. The secret may or may not be a good player, TV commentator Arsenio Iglesias said at the time, but he's really great. Porto in January 1998 for six and a half additional seasons, and will continue to win the UEFA Cup and UEFA Champions League in back-to-back years, although he is currently only backing up the emerging Paulo Ferreira. On 14 March 2002, he was sent off in a 2-1 match against Panathinaikos, receiving a three-arable disqualification. In June 2005, Secretario retired after one year of service at Fc Maya (second tier). He made 35 appearances for Portugal and also played at the 1996 and 2000 European Championships. In both cases the second choice, he made three appearances. I don't agree with downgrading it to TS. Would you really say he's faster than Agbonlahor? I'd say so. In his prime, R. Carlos hit his left arm as if he had been shot with a cannon. Accelerates faster But ID say R. Carlos proved that the cyst is so fast over long distances. R'Carlos is probably the most attacking defender of all time he looked like a striker at times, constantly beating his man, using the space behind his markers and getting to the byline. He was very accurate, he dined not only to rely on his power shot to score free kicks, he was very dangerous on set balls ... If you're the first you're first. If you're second, you're nothing - Bill Shankly. I guarantee the fourth place - Rafael Benitez. p1rha Veteran Stat Maker Posts: 1312 Joined: 2009 February 11, 02:08 Location: Coimbra, Portugal Was thanked: 1 time Postby p1rha » 2009 March 06, 22:14 Vandic wrote: I can not agree at all that it was faster than Agbonlahor on the football field I would say 94, but people obviously think it should be red so 95 max imo.absolutely right, even bosingwa so fast as the RC was IMO, in no way did it deserve 97 for top speed (9294 in its prime), the DS is too high, not how it can maintain its entire speed while dribbling, I'd go for the DS: 86. I think 81 is too low, he scored 3-5 free kicks every year including that magical one against Barthes from France, or against China in the Worl Cup, or against Argentina, etc... He was deadly in this area, I think 85 for FKA, along with his SP (99) well enough ... A lot of roll and power, but not much placement means he'll hit a lot in the wall or in the stands, but when they are on target they are usually unstoppable. That's what I mean, remember, these siats are made to improve a player's resemblance to his real-life habilites, and I have to say I'm pretty good at smashing free kicks into the net, and with R. Carlos (from 81 for FKA) it's really/ly hard to score... Well, Carlos Alberto (the predecessor of Roberto Carlos) also has 83, and he was not as offensive as Roberto Carlos, so... I sugest his aggression should go up, not because it represents better than his offensive mentality, then high attack and because fachetti has 87 and lizarazu has 90 (although I just suggested 88 for it) and they were not offensive as Mr. carlos (I don't think any SB ever was): sugest.attack - 81agression - 89/90 You're bad if you praise, and even worse if you reproach the issue you don't understand. - Da Vinci Back to 00s Go to Users Users This forum: No registered users and 2 guests
